Traditional students must seek and obtain formal admission to the University before being permitted to acquire more than 13 credit hours. Traditional students not admitted through the regular admission process are limited to attempting two courses (maximum six credit hours) per semester or during the entire summer session until reaching 13 credit hour limit. Traditional transfer students in good standing from another regionally accredited college or university, who have not been admitted, may take their 13 credit hours in one semester or during an entire summer session. The policy is implemented to the discretion of the Vice President for Academic Affairs.
